THE GUARDIAN, FRIDAY, 12 SEPTEMBER, 1930.

(By SYLVIA MAYFAIR).

Princess Arthur of Connaught is, I suppose, the keenest golfer among ladies of the Royal Family. I hear that she has been playing a lot lately on a course near London that is patronised by the Prince of Wales and his brothers.

Her husband often partners the Princess, and their son, Lord MacDuff, is already developing a talent for the game.

Queen Maud of Norway, who will soon be coming to stay at Appleton House, near Sandringham, is another Royal devotee of golf, while Princess Helena Victoria also plays a very good game. Princess Helena is now spending some weeks with Sir Courtauld Thomson and his sister at Gullane, and she has been enjoying many rounds on the famous links there.

NORTH-EASTERN DAILY GAZETTE, FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1898.

THE PRINCESSES VICTORIA AND MAUD.

Princess Charles of Denmark, who has now come up to Marlborough House for the season, has been displaying at Cromer and elsewhere all her old vivacity, and has been indulging in golf and driving exercise freely in the companionship of her elder sister, the Princess Victoria. There is no doubt but that the presence of the Princess Maud has greatly conduced to the speedy convalescence of the Princess Victoria, who had been brought into a rather low condition of spirits by the severity of the illness through which she has been passing. The young Princess will be able without fatigue, to endure the full rigors of the London season. It is still necessary, however, for the daily occupation of the Princess Victoria to be supervised, as it is naturally desired by her parents that the exacting life of Marlborough House during the season should not bring on a relapse.
